

Eastern Clayton.

John L. Moore, A. H. Seward
EDITORS.

BUILDING, MISS.

Saturday, May 24, 1861.

Price, 15 cents. Postage 1 cent paid in advance.

Editor of the Jasper Gray.

Colonel of a company of soldiers in the line of march on Washington to reinforce the South, when they reached it other companies joined and he returned to the seat of government to command the forces designed to put the garrison and the party across brought the eyes of many a less "united country."

Meeting forced at the Mayor's office in the Court House on Wednesday.

The mayor addressed the troops by letter, and the troops were ordered to stand in readiness to defend the city in case of attack.

He said, "We have no hostile force here which we can confide in."

There was no collision which had been predicted by the ladies, and were soon on the road to the rear depot, where they were to take the cars next day.

It was my compliment to say that the arrival of this host of men for war, we have seen our sons. They were not superior to us in the army.

It includes 100,000 rank and file, and is composed almost exclusively of men who are accustomed to exercise, and all are in the ranks of the Washington and Alexandria Railroads.

The District of Columbia troops returned to Washington.

Virginia picked up a small regiment at Fredericksburg.

Virginia has a large force in the state, and is well prepared to meet any emergency.

It is impossible that any community should sustain better fighting men. We publish a full list of the troops dimissed to their units.

The General Battle.—Among the telegraphic wires we publish today, it is almost stated that a battle has been fought in Virginia, in which 100,000

American troops were killed.

The reports on the subject fed the

the fire, and the reader must consider it, as it is now.

And now—One of the writers and

one of the hands left the Clarion on

Wednesday, and the news is that the large number of printers volunteered all over the country, we shall probably find it difficult to replace our

force by workmen, the least, to see that the paper leaves home in the war.

And the reader may expect to find in columns as full as those of this their

atmosphere of excitement.

The Remond Battle.—Among the telegraphic wires we publish today, it is almost stated that a battle has been

fought in Virginia, in which 100,000

American troops were killed.

The reports on the subject fed the

the fire, and the reader must consider it, as it is now.

And now—One of the writers and

one of the hands left the Clarion on

Wednesday, and the news is

that the large number of printers volunteered all over the country, we shall probably find it difficult to replace our

force by workmen, the least, to see that

the paper leaves home in the war.

And the reader may expect to find in

columns as full as those of this their

atmosphere of excitement.

And now—One of the writers and

one of the hands left the Clarion on

Wednesday, and the news is

that the large number of printers volunteered all over the country, we shall probably find it difficult to replace our

force by workmen, the least, to see that

the paper leaves home in the war.

And the reader may expect to find in

columns as full as those of this their

atmosphere of excitement.

And now—One of the writers and

one of the hands left the Clarion on

Wednesday, and the news is

that the large number of printers volunteered all over the country, we shall probably find it difficult to replace our

force by workmen, the least, to see that

the paper leaves home in the war.

And the reader may expect to find in

columns as full as those of this their

atmosphere of excitement.

And now—One of the writers and

one of the hands left the Clarion on

Wednesday, and the news is

that the large number of printers volunteered all over the country, we shall probably find it difficult to replace our

force by workmen, the least, to see that

the paper leaves home in the war.

And the reader may expect to find in

columns as full as those of this their

atmosphere of excitement.

And now—One of the writers and

one of the hands left the Clarion on

Wednesday, and the news is

that the large number of printers volunteered all over the country, we shall probably find it difficult to replace our

force by workmen, the least, to see that

the paper leaves home in the war.

And the reader may expect to find in

columns as full as those of this their

atmosphere of excitement.

And now—One of the writers and

one of the hands left the Clarion on

Wednesday, and the news is

that the large number of printers volunteered all over the country, we shall probably find it difficult to replace our

force by workmen, the least, to see that

the paper leaves home in the war.

And the reader may expect to find in

columns as full as those of this their

atmosphere of excitement.

And now—One of the writers and

one of the hands left the Clarion on

Wednesday, and the news is

that the large number of printers volunteered all over the country, we shall probably find it difficult to replace our

force by workmen, the least, to see that

the paper leaves home in the war.

And the reader may expect to find in

columns as full as those of this their

atmosphere of excitement.

And now—One of the writers and

one of the hands left the Clarion on

Wednesday, and the news is

that the large number of printers volunteered all over the country, we shall probably find it difficult to replace our

force by workmen, the least, to see that

the paper leaves home in the war.

And the reader may expect to find in

columns as full as those of this their

atmosphere of excitement.

And now—One of the writers and

one of the hands left the Clarion on

Wednesday, and the news is

that the large number of printers volunteered all over the country, we shall probably find it difficult to replace our

force by workmen, the least, to see that

the paper leaves home in the war.

And the reader may expect to find in

columns as full as those of this their

atmosphere of excitement.

And now—One of the writers and

one of the hands left the Clarion on

Wednesday, and the news is

that the large number of printers volunteered all over the country, we shall probably find it difficult to replace our

force by workmen, the least, to see that

the paper leaves home in the war.

And the reader may expect to find in

columns as full as those of this their atmos